FAHMI MURSYID

Fahmi Mursyid - Tanah Merah (Album)
Ultraviolet Light MC

Based in Bandung, Indonesia, Fahmi Mursyid is an experimental composer and musician who applies granular synthesis techniques to traditional Indonesian instruments like the suling, pan flute, kalimba, saron and bonang. Immediately on pressing play on this cassette-only EP you find yourself in this strangely rooted yet suggestively abstract place. The battle is with your own knowledge of where Fahmi is from and your familiarity with the sound-sources- the instant geographical and ethnological connections your mind makes mean that at first it feels like merely a gamelan remix project.

Although Fahmi's intent across this EP is clearly to create tracks specifically for acousmatic listening, he's only partially successful in that regard as the sound sources still seem traceable at first- gongs and finger-pianos coalescing into whirls of clustered sound, overhanging bell-drones finding themselves snipped and reversed and pulled back into the maelstrom. The effects of musique concrète are there throughout; tinkling bells find themselves pulled and stretched into an oddly spiritual and reflective space, a small shrine-like space where the walls bounce the sound against itself and through itself.

Though seemingly Western in technique, what emerges over the course of the tracks here is that Mursyid thinks and feels in an Eastern way about his music, and is using technology in a way that reaffirms both the alienness and the comfort of his palette of traditional sounds - this is useful music in the best way, it feels like it needs to be woven into the structure of day to day activities to really gain resonance, to really seep into your consciousness and your home. Put it on loop and let it take you somewhere unique.

Sumber Irama yang tidak Kasatmata Pekan Komponis Indonesia 2016

Citra pun menulis Mendobrak Nada, Menghentak Irama; Electronic Dance Music (EDM) dalam Jelajah Ruang dan Waktu yang memaparkan beberapa fenomena secara spesifik dalam beberapa karya musisi Indonesia yang membuat EDM, lalu tayangan ajang pencarian bakat musisi EDM, serta beberapa event besar bertaraf internasional yang diselenggarakan setiap tahun.

Eksperimen terhadap musik elektronik juga tak luput dari jangkauan musisi, komposer, hingga pembuat alat musik. Buktinya, Komite Dewan Kesenian Jakarta selama Juli-Agustus 2016 telah mengurasi 60 karya musik elektronik dari 52 calon peserta yang mendaftar dari berbagai kota hingga akhirnya terpilih enam komponis muda yang tampil dalam panggung eksperimental konser.

Musik elektronik seakan memiliki magnet tersendiri untuk diulik. Beragam sumber bunyi disimbolkan bentuk-bentuk alat musik tertentu dalam format fisik dan digital berskala industri ataupun ciptaan sendiri. Hal ini menjadi menarik ketika sumber bunyi yang tak kasatmata diinterpretasikan kembali oleh ide-ide filosofis.

Mereka di antaranya Fahmi Mursyid dari Bandung yang membawakan komposisi electric tropical. Konsep elektrik menggabungkan unsur musik modern (beat hiphop, soundscape) dan alat tradisional seperti suling, minigamelan, dan kalimba.

One Instrument Sessions One Instrument DL/LP Alessandro Di Puccio One Instrument Sessions One Instrument DL/7" Fahmi Mursyid

One Instrument Sessions One Instrument DL/LP

The cheerful chatter of Alessandro Di Puccio's vibraphone invites you into his 7" release. "Autumn Jig" is an ebullient triple-time flurry, followed by the pensive "Wandering" and the oriental curlicues of "Transparent Shapes". It's all charming, Indonesian experimentalist Fahmi Mursyid breaks the one instrument rule by employing six, one on each track. But his method is consistent throughout: simple playing of a West Javanese instrument (gamelan percussion, jaw harp, pan flute) is modified by gentle granular synthesis. The exception is the Rösler piano, an upright keyboard that was exported across the world. Mursyid may well have grown up alongside one in Bandung. These half dozen tracks are musique concrète at its most colourful and (whisper it) pretty- a treat.

Listen And Drift Away To These Relaxing Ambient Tape Loops From Indonesia

The power of the minimal setup.

With an ever-increasing array of powerful, portable and affordable electronic instruments available, the temptation for producers is to go maximal with their sound. But as these videos—courtesy of Indonesian musician Fahmi Mursyid—prove, a seriously affective and versatile sound can be crafted from the most limited of means.

Largely working with Walkman tape loops, a few effects pedals and a few VCV digital modular patches, Mursyid creates oceanic movements of sound that belie their humble origins.

Restricting his frame to a few elements means that Mursyid has to get creative in his manipulation of sound. Experimenting with tone and process, he creates cassette loops with metal tubes, recalling the tape loop experiments of Brian Eno at a micro scale. By updating the UK ambient master's formula, Mursyid amplifies the music's eerie, intimate sense of space even further.

Insitu Recordings Magazine - Issue 3

Artist Focus: Fahmi Mursyid by Cordey Lopez

Fahmi claims that although he has undertaken light study and performance of gamelan, he does not have a particularly strong connection to the music. Initially, I found it natural to conclude Fahmi had a connection and/or self-identification with “noise music,” a music trend that has been growing explosively across Indonesia in the past decade. Like Fahmi, noise artists tend to have prolific output and often collaborate and work under various monikers. Fahmi also frequently incorporates techniques from the noise genre – abrasive timbres, playful disruption, and extreme dissonance. However, the case for labeling Fahmi a “noisician” is not as strong as I first assumed. Though his music has appeared on a few noise compilations and has made appearances at noise shows, he does not self-identify with “noise,” and his music encompasses too many other styles to fit tightly into the noise rubric.

PKIna 2016: Mencari Makna di Balik Suara

Pekan Komponis Indonesia (PKIna) kembali diselenggarakan oleh Dewan Kesenian Jakarta (DKJ). Di tahun 2016 ini tema besar yang diangkat oleh Komite Musik DKJ periode 2016-2018 adalah 'Musik Eksperimental Elektronik'. Senin malam ini adalah malam pertama dari Pekan Komponis Indonesia yang berlangsung selama tiga hari yang memadukan konser karya-karya komponis muda, pameran organologi, masterclass dan juga diskusi Meja Bundar Musik yang kesemuanya dihidupkan bersama-sama tahun ini. Tahun-tahun sebelumnya, acara-acara yang cukup padat ini selalu terpisah-pisah penyelenggaraannya namun tahun ini PKIna menjadi titik awal kegiatan Komite Musik DKJ periode baru ini.

Malam ini menjadi bukti perjalanan tiga orang komponis muda dalam mencari makna di balik sesuara yang tercipta dan terolah dalam perangkat-perangkat listrik dan bagaimana konsep penciptaan dan keberanian dalam menjelajah dunia suara diketengahkan ke publik yang memadati Teater Kecil – Taman Ismail Marzuki. Ketiganya berangkat dari ide instrumen musik tradisi Indonesia dan meraciknya dalam balutan elektronik.

Komponis Fahmi Mursyid dari Bandung menjadi yang pertama mengisi panggung. Mengetengahkan karya bertajuk Eklektik Tropikal yang merupakan pengejawantahan eksplorasinya terhadap bunyi-bunyian dan alat musik tradisi, tiga orang musisi berdiri di atas panggung berbekal laptop dan instrumen daerah dan gitar listrik. Memulai dengan suasana magis dengan eksplorasi bebunyian dan rekaman ambience alam dan kicauan burung yang asri, Fahmi kemudian mengolah irama hiphop yang sarat bebunyian techno dan berpadu dengan kayuhan pada gitar dan warna-warni instrumen tradisi seperti seruling, dan panflute.

Fahmi Mursyid - Sejarah
Cellar Tapes DL/MC

Fahmi Mursyid is an Indonesian sound artist who manipulates traditional Indonesian music as his source material to make purely textural electroacoustic collages. I found myself wishing I could hear more of the sources: across most of Sejarah's six pieces they were no more discernible than a portrait that's been squeegeed into a Gerhard Richter blur. And those blurs form a familiar abstract impressionist fog: the slow, incremental expansions and dissolves of "Hiroshima" are effective but mark out well-known co-ordinates. The more frictional moments work best, when Mursyid could be sawing one sample against another, making each resonate like string meeting bow.

Eerie, amazing sounds from tape loops, patches – like whales in space

Fahmi Mursyid from Indonesia has been creating oceans of wondrously sculpted sounds on netlabels for the past years. Be sure to watch these magical constructions on nothing but Walkman tape loops with effects pedals and VCV Rack patches – immense sonic drones from minimal materials. Fahmi hails from Bandung, in West Java, Indonesia. While places like Yogyakarta have hogged the attention traditionally (back even to pre-colonial gamelan kingdom heydeys), it seems like Bandung has quietly become a haven for experimentalists.

He also makes gorgeous artworks and photography, which I've added here to visualize his work further.

This dude and his friends are absurdly prolific. But you can be ambitious and snap up the whole discography for about twelve bucks on Bandcamp. It's all quality stuff, so you could load it up on a USB key and have music when you're away from the Internet ranging from glitchy edges to gorgeous ambient chill.
